desire for speed increases, so does the desire to pay for it. This consumer demand for faster vehicles and internet service is causing the current telecom infrastructure to buckle under the pressure, much to the detriment of consumers who are forced to pay for crappy wireless service. This is an ideal time for a new player to enter the space and shake things up -- just like the cable industry did in the late 90s and early 2000s. Two anonymous sources have claimed that Verizon is looking to acquire T-

Mobile USA -- they didn't name Verizon as their buyer, but it's said to be the largest mobile carrier in the United States. "Verizon is interested in a T-Mobile acquisition for the same reason Google, Amazon and Apple are: wireless. Verizon has the spectrum to build a carrier, not just a provider. The two companies have been in a bidding
