Dopamine is a major transmitter in the central nervous system, where it plays a role in behavioral responses to drugs of abuse, and in movement, arousal, learning and reward. Three subtypes of the dopamine receptor, D1, D2 and D3, have been identified, but little is known about the function of the D3 receptor. We have cloned the mouse and human cDNAs encoding the D3 dopamine receptor. The proposed studies aim to examine its function at the cellular and circuit level. We will express the receptor in cell lines and in Xenopus oocytes and characterize its coupling to G proteins, to downstream signaling cascades and in response to pharmacological ligands. We will also examine its expression in specific brain regions and its localization in presynaptic and postsynaptic compartments using immunocytochemistry and in situ hybridization. Finally we will generate a D3-specific knockout animal to evaluate its function. We expect that these studies will provide insight into the function of the D3 receptor and will help elucidate its role in human pathology.
